"Snow Woman" by Lenna Lehtolainen is the fourth in her Maria Kallio series. Although I enjoyed the previous three, I found this one to be the best by far. In each of the books to date, Kallio works at a different job (though all are related to law and law enforcement). "Snow Woman" finds her working in the Violent Crimes Unit of the Espoo (Finland) Police Department. The characters are well developed, especially Kallio who continues to grow both professionally and personally. The story opens as Maria and Antti Sarkela marry. But just as happens in real life, Kallio soon finds herself with more than just thoughts of wedded bliss to fill her hours. When Aline Rosberg, the head of a women's retreat, is reported missing and subsequently found frozen to death on the grounds of the retreat, the investigation bogs down. But with the discovery of her pregnancy, the concerns in Kallio's life speed up. And at about the same time, she gets news that a convicted murderer has escaped and is out to seek revenge against her and a fellow detective. Because Rosberg was the director of a women's retreat, Kallio must interview several of her guests and friends who were present the night Rosberg went missing. These women have varied backgrounds. Johanna S  ntii, estranged from her devoutly religious husband after she aborted her baby to save her own life; Milla Martilla, a stripper and suspected prostitute; Tarja Kivim  ki, a reporter and mistress of a high government official. It's Kallio's interaction with these women, giving her ample opportunity to examine her own values, beliefs, and desires, that made this a good read for me. Kallio loves her work, and she is basically a loner used to looking only after herself. Fortunately, her husband is as independent as she.
